Not illustrated. 1897 Excerpt: . . . length of the route is about two and a half miles, and it is estimated that 20, 000 will be required for the undertaking. This is to be considered, of course, as merely the first instalment of an extensive system of electric traction, and if the results are only partially as favourable as is anticipated, there can be no doubt that at least the greater part of the present mileage of Glasgow tramways will be converted to electric traction, while extensions will doubtless be made rapidly. In the course of the discussion in the Town Council, reference was made by Mr. Walter Paton and other councillors to the reports made from America, by the special commissioner of the Glasgow1 Herald, with reference to American electric tramways; and it appears probable that the enterprise of the Herald was conclusive in determining the Council to adopt, at least...
