Not illustrated. 1921 Excerpt: .latter district provided the markets were inherently the same. He made it his business to find out whether there really was enough difference in the buying power to account for the discrepancy of purchases; and this very study of itself led him into markets he never had explored. In this work he was assisted by his brother, who took charge of statistics. The owner of a large chain of retail grocery stores got his start as a youth by going out with a horse and buggy in his home community and building up a tea and coffee route in one such district that was lagging far behind its apparent per capita possibilities. Haller found a foreign settlement with singularly primitive ideas, although for the most part remarkably thrifty and prosperous. Here was a community of several hundred families who clung in many respects to European customs,...
